CANCER NUTRACEUTICALS

Nutraceuticals are dietary supplements or functional foods that may offer additional health benefits beyond basic nutrition, particularly in cancer prevention and management. Some, like Curry leaves Extract, Moringa leaves Extract, curcumin and green tea extract, have shown potential in reducing inflammation and inhibiting cancer cell growth.

HERBAL SUPPLEMENTS

Herbal supplements are natural products derived from plants used to support health and treat various conditions. They often contain extracts or powders from herbs like echinacea, ginseng, or ginger and can offer benefits such as immune support or anti-inflammatory effects.

NATURAL COLOURANTS

Natural colorants are pigments derived from plant, mineral, or animal sources used to add color to foods, cosmetics, and textiles. They offer an alternative to synthetic dyes and can provide a range of colors, such as beetroot for red or turmeric for yellow. While they are often considered safer and more environmentally friendly, their stability and intensity can vary compared to synthetic options.

LIPOSOMAL STRIPS

Liposomal strips are thin, dissolvable strips that deliver active ingredients through liposomes, which are tiny lipid-based vesicles designed to encapsulate and protect the substances. These liposomes enhance the absorption and bioavailability of the ingredients, allowing for efficient delivery to the bloodstream or targeted areas.

WATER SOLUBLE PROTEINS

Water-soluble proteins dissolve in water, forming solutions rather than suspensions, which allows them to be easily absorbed and utilized in various biological processes. They include essential proteins like albumin, found in blood plasma, and enzymes involved in digestion and metabolism. Due to their solubility, these proteins play crucial roles in maintaining cellular functions, transporting molecules, and regulating biochemical reactions.
